

Should Holly have agreed to lose weight?

On the season two premiere of Holly's World, a producer of Holly Madison's Las Vegas burlesque show asked her to tone up – and she reluctantly agreed.

Should she have? The experts don't see eye to eye.

It comes with the territory

I've always known Holly to be a gorgeous girl with an incredible body, but this is what the entertainment business is like! When a woman signs up for a highly body-conscious stage show like Peepshow, the expectation of how every inch of your body should look is high. It's a lot of pressure! If you don't want to embrace the physical work and discipline it takes to have a tiny, little, tight body onstage, then it's time to pick a different profession. It's a hard lesson to learn but so true!

It's completely unnecessary

Burlesque is all about the female form and, since women come in all shapes and sizes, you do not need to be rail thin in order to perform. Marilyn Monroe was a voluptuous size 12, and she is the most famous bombshell ever! Vegas producers' views on how a dancer or showgirl needs to look is not what the general public views as beautiful. And their attitudes can lead to dancers with eating disorders. I know Miss Madison personally: She is a stunning, perfect and beautiful performer. She's the star of the show, and she shouldn't have to change for anyone.

WE CAN'T STOP TALKING ABOUT...

...that horrifying baby-yoga viral video, in which a Russian woman swings a newborn around by its limbs. The troubled ladies of Teen Mom look like saints in comparison.

...the fact that Regis Philbin is retiring at the end of the summer! Sad. Our mornings will never be the same.

...the hilarious scene in the E! reality series Kourtney & Kim Take New York, in which Kanye West compliments Scott Disick on his style. Talk about a bromance!

...the TMI Tweet from Jessica Simpson that references her fiancé Eric Johnson's "perfect Tush" and how she loves "laying [her] hands on it." Ugh. Keep it up, Jess, and we're going to Team Nick.
